DOUMERGUE

On the thirteenth day of June, M. Gaston Doumergue was elected president of the French Republic, by the national assembly at Versailles. This pational assembly consisted of the senate and chamber of deputies com-

M. Doumergue received five bundred and fifteen votes as against three hundred and nine by his nearest competitor.

Mr. Doumerpoe is considered a rad socialist but a mild one. So. mild indeed that the bulk of socialista and radicals were opposed to moderate votes of the assembly, by those who considered it necessary or the traditional polities of France to be maintained. It should not be lorgetten that B. Deumergue voted for and defended M. Poincare's foreign policy in the senate and approved of France's entry into the Ruha.

Voting was closed at 4:50 o'clock at which time the result was read in congress by M. Bienvenue Martin. ice president of the senate. Fully into thirds of the deputies and senathre present arose from their seats thering wildly. The benches occupied by the socialists and radical-socialist deputies could at once be distinguished, as their occupants -mained ecated. The small knot of communists attempted to sing the "Internationale," but their cores ( were promptly drowned by those of pres five hundred senators and depnow singing the "Marsellane"

There were only three cardulates M. Doumergue, M. Prinleve and third, M. Camelinat. The result of the voting was that M. Douberape received 515 votes, Painlere 300, and M. Camelinat 21. Having polled more than half the votes cast. M Doumergue was therefore declared elected

After thanking Mr. Martin and M Marsal for their congratulations, M. Doumergue said that he would endeavor to put into practice at the Elysee the same principles of fidelity to ideals and love of country which had been his during a political life extending over thirty years.

Long before it was possible for the presidential correge to reach Paris the public, eager for the first sight of the new President, were crowded along the Champ Eigseen. It was important for this crowd to be near shelter, for heavy storms broke from time to time, and the chestnuts with the finest foliage were those selected.

What M. Doumergue will do with tis new position is as yet uncertain. but he is the distinct choice of the najority of the deputies selected by the people and the reign of a constitutional head of the state is always followed with interest

Port Arthur has no objection in the world to road systems which benefit Beaumont. Beaumont is entitled to good roads,

But there's another side to this question. Why not give Port Arthur roadways to which she is entitled? Why not consider Port Arthur's claims for several new modern highways?

From Pert Arthur's standpoint the thing which stands out ered in this High Island venture.

Beaumont claims that the Hamshire route to High Island is only about 40 miles, half of which they claim is paved, while that via Sabine Pass and McFadden's beach is 62 miles. The figures may be true but we doubt it. There is no possibility for an airline road from Hamshire to High Island unless, as has been declared, the county bankrupts itself to build it

There is something more to this road business than the mere matter of benefitting a handful of Beaumont oil field supply and wholesale merchants. The population embraced in a ten mile radius from Port Arthur cannot be duplicated in a similar district in a ten mile radius from Beaumont except by reversing Port Neches and Nederland. If Port Neches and Nederland were located on the other side of Beaumont, Beaumont, if it had not made the claim that the road should benefit in ratio of population which it so far has failed to do, would have some facts and figures arguing its case.

United States in 1923 is estimated by the National Safety council from statistics collected from states, insurance agencies and industrial concerns. Industrial accidents reported by only nine states-Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Delaware, Washington, Oregon and Pennsylvania-totaled more than 500,000, an increase of approximately 100,000 over the previous period, with 4,112 fatal accidents in the periods reported for in eight of the states as against 3,726 for the year preceding.

The air is full just now with a lot of windy verbage on the proposal for a road to Hight Island. The proposal has merit. There should be such a road. But there should be a fair and generous inclination to consider Port Arthur in building it, because Port Arthur is going to have something to do in paying

Some years ago a county bond issue was carried for a system of roadwork through the county. Work has been underway more or less consistently every since on these several projects, which carried state and federal aid. Much of it is yet to be completed. But when completed Beaumont will have an excellent road system, a road system which radiates like the spokes of a waron wheel to all sections of the country, with Beaumont merchants.
